Mountains are tall, rocky landforms that rise high above the land around them. They are created by movements of the Earth's crust, often from tectonic plates pushing against each other. Mountains can be found all over the world and are home to many different plants and animals. They also affect the weather and provide important resources like water and minerals.

1. How are mountains usually formed?
2. What can mountains do to the weather in their area?
3. Why are mountains important for plants, animals and people?

Find and copy a conjunction. Explain why it has been used in the sentence.

TBAT: recognise the features of an explanation text.

What is an explanation text?

When would you use an explanation text?

What is an explanation text?

An explanation text is a type of writing that helps readers understand how something works or why something happens. It explains a process, describes a concept, or gives details about how and why things occur.

For example, an explanation text about 'How rainbows form' would describe the process of sunlight passing through raindrops and being split into different colors. The goal is to make complex ideas clear and easy to understand.

Talk partners - can you think of an example of an explanation text?

Explanation texts - English - Learning with BBC Bitesize

Features of an explanation text

These are the main features we will be looking at when writing our information text:

- A question title - How do flowering plants grow?
- A short opening that includes a question - Have you ever wondered how plants grow?
- The stages of the process in chronological order - first, then, next
- Technical language for the subject - pollination, stem, photosynthesis
- Diagrams or illustrations with captions - a caption is a brief description or explanation that accompanies an image, photo, or illustration

How Do Flowering Plants Grow?

Have you ever wondered how plants grow? Then, read on...
This fascinating leaflet will explain how the plant lifecycle works.

The Beginning

Plants begin life as a seed. If the seed has water and warmth, it germinates (starts to grow). First, a root appears, which grows down into the soil. After that, a pale, leafless shoot pushes up towards the light.

a germinating seed

Photosynthesis

As soon as the plant's tiny shoot is tall enough, it produces green leaves at the top. These are the factory of the plant that use sunshine and water to create food to build more leaves, the stem and flowers. This is an important process called photosynthesis. Plants couldn't exist without it!

a young seedling a growing plant

Pollination

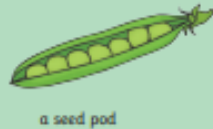

Because the flowers' petals are brightly coloured, they attract insects such as bees. Inside each flower, minute grains of pollen are found on short stalks. The bees come to collect this pollen for their food. As they continue from plant to plant, some of it brushes off and falls into other flowers. This is called pollination. As a result, pollen mixes with tiny egg cells and this makes a seed.

Seed Dispersal

Once the flower has been pollinated, the coloured petals fall off. Then, the base of the flower starts to swell up into a fruit as the seeds grow.

a seed pod

Eventually, the fruit ripens and the seeds are released. This is called seed dispersal. This means that the whole cycle can begin again as a new plant rapidly starts to grow.
