How to Be a Good Friend

A Marvellous Recipe for Friendship

Have you ever wondered how some people seem to collect friends as easily as Willy Wonka collects extraordinary sweets? The secret is not hidden inside a golden ticket. It is much simpler than that. Being a good friend is rather like making a magnificent cake. If you choose the right ingredients and mix them together carefully, you can create a friendship that is as strong as Charlie and Grandpa Joe's.

Method

Step 1: Pour in the kindness.

First, take a large spoonful of kindness and add it to your friendship bowl. Use kind words, thoughtful actions and friendly smiles. Even the smallest act of kindness can brighten someone's day, just as a single sweet can make a child grin from ear to ear.

Step 2: Add a pinch of patience.

Next, sprinkle in a pinch of patience. Good friends understand that everyone makes mistakes. If your friend is having a difficult day or needs a little extra time, be patient and supportive instead of becoming cross.

Step 3: Stir in honesty.

Now add a dash of honesty. Tell the truth, even when it is tricky to do so. Honest friendships are strong because people know they can trust one another.

Step 4: Mix in a cup of trust.

Carefully pour in a cup of trust. Keep promises whenever possible and never share secrets that have been told to you in confidence. Trust is one of the most important ingredients in any friendship.

Step 5: Fold in good listening.

Add two heaped tablespoons of good listening. When your friend speaks, listen carefully instead of thinking about what you want to say next. Show them that their thoughts and feelings matter.

Step 6: Sprinkle over respect.

Scatter a generous scoop of respect across the mixture. Respect your friend's ideas, feelings, interests and differences. Remember that good friends do not need to be exactly the same.

Step 7: Add a dollop of encouragement.

Now spoon in a dollop of encouragement. Cheer your friend on when they are nervous or trying something new. A few encouraging words can help someone feel brave enough to face even the most enormous challenge.

Step 8: Stir in loyalty.

Carefully mix in a handful of loyalty. Stand by your friend when things become difficult. Charlie never abandoned Grandpa Joe, and Grandpa Joe never stopped believing in Charlie. Their friendship was full of support, trust and care.

Step 9: Finish with laughter.

Finally, sprinkle a handful of laughter over the top. Share jokes, funny stories and happy moments together. Laughter helps friendships grow just like sunshine helps flowers bloom.
